History of Conservation By Dee Lyon

The conservation of forests, also known as nature conservation, is a political and social movement that seeks to protect natural resources including plant and animal species as well as their habitat for the future.

The early conservation movement included fisheries and wildlife management, water, soil conservation and sustainable forestry. The contemporary conservation movement has broadened from the early movement's emphasis on use of sustainable yield of natural resources and preservation of wilderness areas to include preservation of biodiversity. The word conservation is now used more broadly to include the setting aside of natural areas and the active protection of wildlife for their inherent value, as much as for any value they may have for humans.

Early giants in the history of conservation include: Emerson, Thoreau and Marsh.

Ralph Waldo Emerson, author and leader of the literary and philosophical movement known as Transcendentalism, inspired a love of nature. At a time when industry was on the rise and crowded cities were becoming the centers of society, Emerson extolled the beauty of nature. His powerful prose would inspire a generation of

Ventura County Science Fair By Linda Reynolds

On April 14, 2010, Crystal Klabunde and Linda Reynolds had the pleasure of acting as Special Awards judges at the Ventura County Science Fair. Representing Conejo Valley Audubon Society, they gave two awards in memory of H. Elliott McClure, a founding member of CVAS, and a lifelong birder and entomologist. Each winner will be presented with a certificate and a check for $100. Both awards are in the division of Earth, Space and Environmental Sciences.

Jordan Berns, a student at Medea Creek Middle School, presented a project called "To Be Oil Free". He used four different kinds of feathers found on birds, dipped them in oil, and then used three separate solutions to find which one worked best on clearing the feathers of oil.

Kristin Lopez is a student at Ventura High School. Her project is called "Cleaning up the Facts About Aquifers". She devised her own aquifer consisting of sand, rocks and clay soil. She ran both clear and red dye solutions through these mediums.

Both awards were original, attractive, and followed correct scientific procedures. They were accompanied by well-written journals. Jordan and Kristin were invited to share their projects with chapter members at the CVAS general meeting on May 3 at the Western Foundation of Vertebrate Zoology.

Education Column By Thelma Williams

CVAS has had another successful year with outreach to youth and adults in our community.

At least 16 members have volunteered time at Sierra Vista Satwiwa National State park by guiding bird walks which are included in the TREE program (Teens Restoring Endangered Environments), assisting Allen Saute's Sequoia Middle School class in Newbury Park.

Chrystal Klubunde, Thelma Williams and Linda Reynolds participated in a 4 week program at the CAPE Charter School in Camarillo, with slides, guided bird walks with binoculars, and talks using skins from the Western Foundation. (See pictures by Chrystal Klabunde below). The students were so enthusiastic-- observing an Anna's hummingbird stripping bark to construct a nest.

Americans to find great meaning in the natural world.

Henry David Thoreau, a close friend and neighbor of Emerson, stands as perhaps the most influential writer on the subject of nature. In his masterpiece, "Walden", Thoreau recounts the time he spent living in a small house near Walden Pond in rural Massachusetts. While Thoreau was not widely known during his lifetime, his writings have become classics of American nature writing, and it's nearly impossible to imagine the rise of the conservation movement without his inspiration.

Writer, lawyer, and political figure George Perkins Marsh was the author of an influential book published in the 1860s, "Man and Nature". While not as familiar as Emerson or Thoreau, Marsh was an influential voice as he argued the logic of balancing man's need to exploit nature with the need to preserve the planet's resources. Marsh was writing about ecological issues 150 years ago, and some of his observations are indeed prophetic.

Chrystal and Thelma also presented slides and pictures of common birds before the Great Backyard bird count in February to classes at the EARTH'S Magnet school in Newbury Park. Several classes participated in that bird count. Thelma volunteers at that school each week in a 4th grade class.

Six of our members also led bird guided walks at the recent Science Festival at Paramount Ranch sponsored by the National Park Service. Over 400 students were involved in that weekend. Dee Lyon has spoken to several groups in the community and led a recent field trip at the Stage Coach Inn in Newbury Park.

We also have provided Audubon Adventures kits to 20 classrooms in our area. We are delighted to supply these kits to local Elementary classes.

All these outreach programs increase the awareness of the community to the philosophy of the Audubon Society, the enthusiasm of our members for the environment, and for the next generation of birders.
